Dota auto chess tips, Dota auto chess strategy.

Dota Auto Chess may be a worldwide phenomenon and the most successful third party Dota custom game ever, but that doesn't mean playing it is a simple process. Like most things associated with Dota it has complexities you couldn't even imagine, but this guide will set you on a path to Auto Chess greatness. To even load into a match you have to know your way around the Dota client and then once you start playing the lack of tutorials mean it can be even harder to pick up than the basics of real Dota. And then once you start to get the hang of things you'll learn the ever changing meta, and try to figure out all of the hero synergies. It really can be very confusing. However, Dota Auto Chess is a very rewarding experience once you get the hang of it. Close matches that come down to tiny decisions feel just like winning a close game of Dota, which is to say unbelievably satisfying. So pay attention to the basics here, and soon you will be enjoying one of 2019's best gaming surprises. How to install Dota Auto Chess It may not be immediately obvious how to access Dota Auto Chess, after all, you won't be finding it in the Steam top sellers list any time soon, but once you know where to look it is pretty easy to install and play. All you have to do after booting up and logging into Steam, is find Dota 2 in the store and install it. Dota is completely free to play, and runs on pretty much anything, so there shouldn't be any issues here. Once Dota is installed, boot up the game and once you reach the main menu there may be a square featuring Dota Auto Chess. If it is there, give it a click and it will take you straight to the Auto Chess page. If it isn't on the main menu you are going to have to click on the 'Arcade' tab at the top of the home screen, and then search for Dota Auto Chess in the search bar that appears on the upper right corner of the screen. Starting out: the best Dota 2 heroes for beginners Once you reach the Dota Auto Chess workshop page you should see a big install button in the lower right corner. Hit that and Auto Chess will start installing. Once it has installed that button will change to a 'Play Dota Auto Chess' button that will, unsurprisingly, start searching for a server to join and you will soon be playing your first game of Auto Chess. After the initial installation of Auto Chess, you can simply go to the 'Library' tab in the 'Arcade' section of Dota to find the Auto Chess page and start playing, instead of having to search for it every time. How to play Dota Auto Chess Once you make it into a match of Auto Chess you will have an 8x8 chess board in front of you. Word to the wise before we start: a good knowledge of chess won't serve you particularly well here. You start with one gold to your name and given a selection of five randomly picked Dota heroes, or 'Chesses' as they are known in Auto Chess, to choose from as your first piece. Using your courier, the character you control, you must select the hero you first purchased and place it somewhere on your side of the chess board. Once the preparation phase timer has run out your hero will automatically battle some creeps. Once a battle has started you are powerless until it is over, with the AI taking care of all fighting. As each round goes on you will earn more gold, which can be used to buy more heroes, eventually creating a mini army of Dota heroes on your side of the board. Soon you will start to battle other players and the heroes they have purchased and placed on the board. To beat them you will have to assemble a stronger group of heroes and place them in positions that work strategically. More games like Dota 2: the best MOBAs you can play Every round that you lose will result in your courier taking damage, and once your HP is down to zero you are out of the game. The winner is the last person standing, so the more battles you win the longer you will stay in the game. You can see the health stats of your opponents on the right-hand side of the screen. Of course you can upgrade the heroes you have on the board. If you purchase three of the same hero you can combine them into a level two hero, and if you have three of the same level two heroes you can combine them into a level three hero. Upgrading your heroes is the key to staying powerful, but sometimes you might get unlucky with what the hero store is offering you each round. Dota Auto Chess meta Unlike actual Dota, Auto Chess is updated multiple times a week with balance changes and tweaks. This means that the meta shifts almost daily sometimes, and chances are by the time you are reading this the meta will have already shifted slightly, so we won't spend too much time going into specific heroes. However, there are a few other meta strategies to take note of, notably the best hero synergies and buffs you can get. Each hero has both a species and class, and if you have multiple heroes of the same class or species you will get some kind of bonus. Each species and class has different requirements to unlock their respective bonus, but this is where the real strategy of Auto Chess comes in, getting as many buffs as you can to make your team stronger. Strategic like chess: the best strategy games on PC Each bonus is obviously beneficial, but some are stronger than others. The Mage buff reduces all enemy's magic resistance by 40% if you have three of Mage class Chesses on the field, and by a further 40% if you have six, which is a massive advantage for you. In terms of Mage species, having three or more Elves will give all Elves on your team extra evasion, too, which can turn close fights in your favour. Plus, having multiple Undead species will decrease opponent's armour. Then there is the Naga buff, which is very useful if you can get it going into the late game. Two Naga characters will give all allies an extra 30% magic resistance and four will add another 30% on top of that, rendering your enemy's Mage Class units useless. If that all sounds a little confusing sticking to Goblins, Mechs and Warriors will give you some nice bonuses that will synergise well, and should help you pick up the basics of how this system works. Practice makes perfect in Dota Auto Chess, and you can expect to lose a lot of games en route to becoming a champion. Dota Auto Chess tips and tricks Placement is key Think about your hero placement very carefully. As a basic rule of thumb, you are going to want to put your tanks in the front lines with damage dealers and healers in the back, as this means your beefier heroes will be the first to be attacked. However, you are also going to want to think about your opponent's positioning. If you know a lot of your opponents are using heroes with AoE spells consider spreading out your pieces more, but if you know they are all single target damage dealers get those tanks all up in their face. You get interest on your gold Spending all your gold every round is a straight up bad idea. For every 10 gold you have at the end of every turn you will gain one gold in interest. This is only good for five gold per turn, so having more than 50 is pretty useless, but free money is free money, so it's always worth saving up some gold as soon as you are in a comfortable tactical position. Always spy on opponents' strategies Drag the camera away from your chess board and you can see the lineup and benches of your opponents. Do this whenever you can to keep up to date with what everyone else is up to, and what heroes and strategies they may be prioritising, so you can react with powerful counters. buy Riki Riki has an ability where he will make all of the heroes on your bench invisible if he too is on the bench. If you have spare gold and space on your bench this a great way to spend some money, as it will take opponents a second or two extra to figure out what heroes and strats you can use, and every second counts in Dota Auto Chess. And that's your lot. If you ever get bored of this auto chess stuff then you'll be delighted to learn there's a board game version of it called 'chess', and our sister site Wargamer has a guide on how to play chess for beginners. Valve's latest game Dota Underlords is available now in early access on PC, Mac, and mobile. While 'Dota' probably sounds familiar, Underlords isn't a MOBA. It's Valve's spin on Auto Chess, a genre that came to life earlier this year as a Dota 2 mod (funny, huh?). Now Valve has released its own version of Auto Chess. It's free-to-play, so you get your feet wet rather than diving in head first. Seeing as many gamers probably haven't even heard of Auto Chess, we decided to put together this guide covering the basics of the genre and Dota Underlords. What's Auto Chess? Auto Chess is to strategy games what auto-runners are to platformers. You do approximately half the work, while the game handles the rest. Each player places units on the board at the start of a round and then you sit back and watch them fight. That's the gist of it. But of course, it's deeper than that once you dive in. How to play Dota Underlords Dota Underlords matches can be played online against other players or against AI bots. The latter is there to get your bearings. Each match pits you against seven other players. Thankfully, you don't need to simultaneously fight every opponent; that would be pure chaos. Instead, you go up against one opponent at a time in a duel that takes place on a grid-like board. Each round starts at the shop, where you get to buy one of five hero units using gold. There are dozens upon dozens of heroes, so the pool you choose from is randomized and changes each round. After buying a unit, it goes to your bench. From there, you can place it in a spot on your side of the board. Once the set up phase is complete, the fighting commences, all of which happens automatically. The first three rounds are all about loot and leveling against AI bots. If you win a loot round, you'll get to pick between three items, earn gold, and experience. If you lose, you'll still get an item, but it will be chosen for you. One item can be equipped to a hero. After the loot rounds are complete, you'll start cycling through battles against real players. Winning rounds is preferred, but a loss doesn't mean you're out. Your overall HP is on the left side of the screen. Each player starts at 100. If all of your units die, your opponent will do damage to your overall health. Once that reaches zero, it's game over. PvP rounds are occasionally separated by another loot round. Once again, this is your chance to get new items. Leveling up and buying units You can spend gold on additional units in the shop between each round. Heroes come at different prices, though (shown in the upper right-hand corner). If you are just short on gold, you can lock the randomized lineup in the shop for one turn. That way you can buy the hero you want next round. Once purchased, heroes automatically go to your bench. At first, you can only place one unit on the board. As you level up, you can move more units from your bench to the playing field. Level two equals two units, level three equals three, etc. The max level you can reach in a match is ten. You'll level up naturally as you play, with victories leading to more experience points. But you can also spend gold on experience points in the shop to level up. You can hold up to eight units on your bench. To make room for new ones, you can sell units back to the shop for three gold. Alliance bonuses You can check a hero's stats by clicking on the board or bench. These figures will give you a general idea of their damage, DPS, and defense. But you also want to pay attention to the two square icons below a hero's overall rating. These are potential Alliance bonuses. Pair multiple heroes with the same Alliance icons and you'll get stat bonuses that can significantly increase your chances on the battlefield. Upgrading heroes While diversifying your roster for Alliance bonuses is recommended, you should also work towards upgrading heroes. Purchasing three of the same unit lets you create a two-star hero by combining all three one-star units together. Two-star heroes are much more adept in battle than their one-star counterparts. It's possible to upgrade further to a three-star unit if you have three of the same two-star heroes. That means to create one three-star hero, you need nine copies of the same hero. This process can take a while, but it's worth working towards. Earning gold Gold lets you buy new heroes, experience, and reload the shop wares if you don't see what you like on the first go. You'll accumulate gold naturally, but here are two things to keep in mind when it comes to gold. You can earn interest on the gold you save. As each turn passes, you'll be awarded one gold for every ten gold you've hoarded. This maxes out at 50, but you can still get an extra five gold every turn if you have 50 or more gold. Essentially, it's beneficial to keep your gold around 50 as the match progresses. Streaks, both winning and losing, earn you more gold than normal. While it's certainly preferred to go on a winning streak, if you have a string of losses, you can turn the tides in your favor with the right purchases — now made easier because of your extra gold. Full cross-play support Dota Underlords is available to download on PC, Mac, iOS, and Android. It features full cross-play across all platforms, so you can enjoy Auto Chess on all of your devices and play against the whole user base. As Underlords is in early access, it's not exactly feature rich. You can currently play online matches via matchmaking, battle your friends, or play solo against bots. Valve has outlined future steps for Underlords as it gears up for a full release. It will remain free-to-play after exiting early access. If you like the loop, Valve will eventually add ranked matchmaking, more Underlord options, a battle pass, seasons, tournaments, and daily challenges. Naturally, features like the battle pass and cosmetics will cost money (hopefully no loot boxes.) Editors' Recommendations
